NEW QUESTION: 1

A network technician has been asked to make the connections necessary to add video transported via fiber optics to the LAN within a building. Which of the following is the MOST common connector that will be used on the switch to connect the media converter?

- A. ST
- B. MT-RJ
- C. Fiber coupler
- D. FDDI

Answer: A

NEW QUESTION: 2

For this question, refer to the TerramEarth case study. TerramEarth's 20 million vehicles are scattered around the world. Based on the vehicle's location its telemetry data is stored in a Google Cloud Storage (GCS) regional bucket (US, Europe, or Asia). The CTO has asked you to run a report on the raw telemetry data to determine why vehicles are breaking down after 100 K miles.

You want to run this job on all the data. What is the most cost-effective way to run this job?

- A. Move all the data into 1 region, then launch a Google Cloud Dataproc cluster to run the job.
- B. Launch a cluster in each region to preprocess and compress the raw data, then move the data into a region bucket and use a Cloud Dataproc cluster to finish the job.
- C. Move all the data into 1 zone, then launch a Cloud Dataproc cluster to run the job.
- D. Launch a cluster in each region to preprocess and compress the raw data, then move the data into a multi region bucket and use a Dataproc cluster to finish the job.

Answer: B

Explanation:

Explanation

Storage guarantees 2 replicates which are geo diverse (100 miles apart) which can get better remote latency and availability. More importantly, is that multiregional heavily leverages Edge caching and CDNs to provide the content to the end users. All this redundancy and caching means that Multiregional comes with overhead to sync and ensure consistency between geo-diverse areas. As such, it's much better for write-once-read-many scenarios. This means frequently accessed (e.g. "hot" objects) around the world, such as website content, streaming videos, gaming or mobile applications.
