NEW QUESTION: 1
An EMC Avamar backup administrator must configure root-to-root Disaster Recovery (DR) replication from two single-node servers to a single, larger multi-node server, and is asking for DR methods in the event of a failure of one of the single-node servers.
What advice do you give this administrator to protect the data on the single-node servers?
A. A third single-node will need to be purchased and dedicated to both of the existing single-nodes for DR protection.
B. The standard bi-directional replication method between the single-nodes and the multi-node will allow the multi-node to stand in for both of the two single-nodes.
C. The DR full copy replication method is one-to-one, so the administrator will either need a target single- node server for each source-single node, or will need to switch to standard replication.
D. The multi-node server can accept DR full copy from both single-node servers, but can only stand in for one of the single-node servers.

Answer: C
